

I feel that the CW requirement should be dropped from the licensing structure. CW is like another language. If someone wants to learn a second language and use that language to communicate to other people, that's their choice. CW should be a mode of choice, not a requirement for a license. The FCC should drop the CW requirement and let the people who want to use it use it, and leave the people who don't want to use it alone. There is no reason why CW should even be used at all. All of the Armed services have stopped using it, why should Amateur operators be required to learn it if they are not going to use it once they pass the test?